Dear Members

Hope you all had a fantastic Diwali! Do you remember how you first learnt about the origin of Diwali? (Very high) Chances are, that someone narrated the story of the legend to you when you were a child. Even higher chances are that the story began with "Once Upon a Time" (in any one of its forms). And what's most interesting is that you tended to remember the story ever since! So what is it about storytelling and more importantly the way the story begins that gets us interested and curious to hear more of it? Children are rarely eager to sit in one place, correct? Unless of course, someone calls them to narrate a story. It's only then that all the pandemonium they've created suddenly settles down! The answer, friends, is the intrigue and curiosity that a story creates.

Storytelling is one of the most powerful techniques we have as humans to communicate and motivate. In fact many of the world's top speakers consider storytelling to be their forte and use it as much as they can in their speeches as well. After all, nothing catches the audience's attention the way a story does.
